Did You Ever Think You'd Known a Saint?"

MARY EBERSTAD

This morning, the funeral Mass for a priest named Fr. Arne Panula will be offered by Cardinal Donald Wuerl and others at St. Matthew's Cathedral in downtown Washington, D.C. A former head of Opus Dei, U.S.A. who died of cancer earlier this week, and long one of the most influential spiritual figures inside the nation's capital and out, this "Fr. Arne," as he's been known to many friends and admirers, was a priest in full. His is not — yet — a household name. But it would shock no one who knew him if that relative obscurity were someday to change.

There is, for starters, his extraordinary story, including the fact that seeming paradoxes of his life resolved one by one in favor of beauty and holiness. A math and science wunderkind, he nevertheless graduated from college an English major with a lifelong devotion to Shakespeare and Keats; the resulting sharp feel for language would prove to be one of the surgical tools in his conversion kit. Educated at Harvard and other secular venues, and surrounded by worldly friends, he nonetheless and cheerily threw his life at God, being ordained in 1973. Strikingly handsome, and bearing an uncanny resemblance to the young Karol Wojtyła, he would go on to witness to many people — especially young people — that their souls depended on what was beautiful inside, not out.

Or consider Fr. Arne's missionary work in what might seem to be one of the least promising spiritual territories on earth: the nation's capital. There, in a business district packed with lawyers and lobbyists, he presided with infectious elan over the blandly named Catholic Information Center — a social, spiritual, and intellectual powerhouse like no other, set squarely on DC's notoriously louche K Street. Like his predecessors Fr. C.J. McCloskey and Msgr. William Stetson, and with the aid of a dedicated team led by Mitchell Boersma, Fr. Arne saw to it that pilgrims of every kind would migrate to the place: Senators and Supreme Court Justices, tourists and browsers of books, young professionals, troubled spirits in search of help, and other wanderers. Some are drawn in by the CIC's chapel, the closest tabernacle to the White House. Some come for fellowship, including the convivial social scene. Others seek out the CIC's intellectual comforts: the outstanding collection of books; the Leonine Forum fellowship for studying the classics of Catholic social thought; the lifetime reading series; the evening speaking programs featuring authors from around the world.

One must also reckon with another rarity: the grace with which Fr. Arne handled life as the sands ran out. Following months during which he continued work at the CIC, the doctors finally dispatched him home with hospice care in winter 2017 — right before Lent. Then Providence threw another curveball. Contrary to forecasts, Fr. Arne ended up living not days or weeks, but months longer than medical algorithms predicted. Until the fifty-ninth minute of the eleventh hour, he radiated a vitality hard to square with the knowledge that death cells had detonated all over inside. "He's teaching us how to die," one friend observed. "He's acting like a saint," said others. Just as his failing to succumb on schedule seemed to defy explanation, so did his vigor. "I'm dying," he laughed a few weeks ago, "And I'm enjoying some of the best hours of my life." Until the fifty-ninth minute of the eleventh hour, he radiated a vitality hard to square with the knowledge that death cells had detonated all over inside. "He's teaching us how to die," one friend observed. "He's acting like a saint," said others. Such unsettling effects on bystanders — in a good way — kept reverberating. A few months before he entered hospice care, some friends commissioned a portrait of Fr. Arne from master artist Igor Babailov. One of the world's leading portraitists, Babailov has rendered many influential figures, among them industry titans, heads of state, and three popes. It was characteristic of Fr. Arne's humility that he would assent to a charcoal portrait only; any rendition in color, he said, might have appeared immodest.

A few weeks ago, I asked Fr. Arne to share his recollections of St. Josemaria Escriva, founder of Opus Dei, whom he'd known in Spain before becoming a priest. "All my friends and others wanted to know the same thing when Josemaria was canonized," Fr. Arne said casually. "Everyone" asked the exact same question of me: 'Did you ever think you'd known a saint?'

7 estrategias para calmar rabietas tan socorridas como ineficaces

ÁLVARO BILBAO

Descubre qué es lo que NO necesitas hacer.

tantrum1. El grito

Si gritas intensificarás la activación de 3 de las áreas cerebrales que intervienen en las rabietas; la amígdala cerebral (miedo), la corteza orbital (frustración) y la ínsula (sentirse incomprendido) por lo que conseguirás únicamente intensificar la rabieta. Desde el punto de vista de circuitos cerebrales es, posiblemente, la peor decisión de todas. Desde el punto de vista de la psicología infantil, una estrategia muy pobre de enseñar al niño que cuando las cosas van mal hay que mantener la calma.

2. El abandono

“Hugo. Lo siento pero me voy. Ahí te quedas”. Esta estrategia puede hacer que el niño salga corriendo detrás del papá o la mamá porque estará aterrorizado de quedarse solo, pero la rabieta seguirá ahí y puede reactivarse en cuanto te alcance o lleguéis a casa. Girarse y no mirar al niño es otra forma de abandonar sus emociones a su suerte. Si estás en un aprieto urgente de tiempo, intenta tomar a tu bebé en brazos con mucha calma y dulzura y llévalo donde tengáis que ir. Posiblemente te pataleará, pero llegaréis a tiempo y puede que se calme por el camino.

3. La contención física

Esta es una técnica que nace de la ocurrencia errónea de que si el niño físicamente no puede patalear, entonces la frustración se habrá acabado. Si intentas abrazar muy fuerte o sujetar al niño enrabiado de los brazos o las piernas el resultado no será el esperado. Solo conseguiremos que la rabia del pequeño sea mayor. Solo recomendaría contener a un niño en una rabieta si se está dando golpes contra la pared... En ese caso le podemos invitar a tirarse al suelo y patalear si quiere, pidiéndole que no se dé golpes fuertes.

4. La amenaza

“Como no pares de llorar te vas a enterar”. Los que saben de animales siempre dicen que un animal salvaje solo es peligroso cuando se encuentra herido o amenazado. El niño enrabiado ya se encuentra herido en su ilusión y orgullo. ¿Realmente quieres amenazarlo?

5. La vergüenza

“Lucía deja de llorar...que este señor te está mirando”. La mítica frase que nos decían de pequeños más que pasada de moda está científicamente desacreditada. No sirve para nada. La razón es muy sencilla; los niños de dos o tres años no pueden contener las emociones fuertes por sí mismos y necesitan desgastarlas, antes de poder manejarlas. La vergüenza le dará igual o incluso agravará el problema.

6. La distracción

“¡Anda! ¡mira qué perrito más bonito!”. Es un buen intento....en el año 2016 le funcionó a una madre en Finlandia y a un padre de familia numerosa en el sur de Inglaterra. Con esto quiero decir que puede que si la rabieta ya está terminándose una distracción pueda ayudar un poquito a que el niño se calme, pero cuando el horno está a máxima temperatura intentar distraer al niño posiblemente sólo conseguirá que se revuelva.

7. El diálogo “Socrático”

Dar razones a los niños cuando les decimos “no”, es poco eficaz para resolver la rabieta en el acto, pero ayudará a que poco a poco sea capaz de lograrlo...así que podríamos decir que es una estrategia ineficaz en el corto plazo pero positiva en el largo plazo. Las rabietas no se pueden calmar con un chasquido o un truco mágico. Las rabietas son un fenómeno natural y saludable del desarrollo cerebral infantil. Poco a poco el niño irá desarrollando la capacidad de calmarse y superar las frustraciones. Pero para ello necesita mucho tiempo y sentir que estás a su lado.
